NARRATIVE PROFILE

History

The creation of the City of New Buffalo was the result of a violent October storm in 1834. During the storm Captain Wessell Whittaker's schooner, Post Boy, ran aground at State Creek near what is now the present Village of Grand Beach. The captain and crew survived, but had to walk 15 miles south to Michigan City to reach a settlement. Struck by the beauty of the wooded area and the advantages of the natural harbor created by the junction of Lake Michigan, the Galien River, and Potawatomi Lake, Whittaker quickly filed a land claim. He then laid out plans for a city that he named New Buffalo, after his hometown of Buffalo, New York. Whittaker convinced some of his close friends of the value of the property and persuaded them into a partnership. Certain that they would make fortunes in real estate speculation, they began the settlement of New Buffalo.

On March 28, 1836, a year before Michigan became a state, the Village of New Buffalo was formed and Alonzo Bennett became its first president. Land prices in the area increased rapidly until 1841, a year that was marked by a severe winter and the start of a brief economic decline as well as the death of Captain Whittaker. The faithful few that remained in New Buffalo during that year kept their spirits alive with hope for better days. Their faithfulness was rewarded. With the arrival of spring, many of the old settlers returned and the economy rebounded.

The Michigan Central Railroad came to New Buffalo in 1849, sparking an economic boom. In order to complete their journeys, people en route to Chicago had to get off at New Buffalo and either board lake ships or travel by land around the southern end of Lake Michigan. The boom collapsed in 1852 with the completion of the Michigan Central line to Chicago. The collapse of 1852 affected New Buffalo until the late 19th century. With arrival of the automobile in the early 1900's, New Buffalo became the Gateway of Michigan and revitalization began with the influx of tourists.

Observations

The City of New Buffalo has grown in popularity for Chicagoans as a tourist destination. Beautiful marinas, condos, beaches and quaint downtown area provide an ideal atmosphere for all. New Buffalo is the proud owner of a beautiful harbor, ideal for recreational purposes. It has a number of sandy beaches that add to the beauty of the area. The water and sewer lines cover most of the City with recent plans underway to build a new water tower.

Community Vision

- A. Maintain the status quo of an upper class resort area.
- B. Continue to focus on improving recreational facilities.
- C. Attract clean, light industry to sustain the community economically during the winter.

Agenda of the Community Strategic Plan

There is no current strategic plan available.
